This tutorial is designed for someone who wants to get started with or improve their Photoshop skills. We will cover the basic steps to turn an image from digital into a finished piece of art. A disclaimer to note first: Photoshop CS4 is the version that we will be using in this tutorial. If you do not have this version of Photoshop, please skip this article until you do. Step 1: The Import Step We will use an image as our starting point, but before we start the other steps, we need to load the image we want to alter into the computer. There are several ways to import a file from another computer or online. Please refer to the FAQ for a thorough explanation of each method. You can directly import the image from your own computer as a.psd file in Photoshop by opening the image in Photoshop. You can export an image to the web or a disk for someone else to load from the Internet. From your web browser, you can import an image by copying and pasting the web address that contains the image into your computer. You can export a web image to a file on your computer by right-clicking and selecting "Save Image As" on the web browser. You can export an image from an online image host to a file on your computer by right-clicking and selecting "Save Image As" on the online image host. You can also load an image in a Photoshop document. You can make copies of your image and change it many times using this technique. You can load multiple images into one Photoshop document by dragging and dropping them. You can close your image as you are done with it and save the document, or you can save it in a.psd file if you want to continue working on it. You can load an image in from a DVD, CD, or flash drive. The same steps for loading an image from a web address as for loading an image from a disk will apply here as well. Finally, you can import an image as a.JPEG or.TIFF image file that was originally taken with a digital camera. Step 2: Adding Adjustments We will begin to add adjustments to the image we want to make. These adjustments range from changing colors to sharpening the image. Image 1: Most Adjustment Layers The first thing we will do is add an Adjustment Layer

Brushes in Photoshop are an essential tool. Depending on the occasion, they can be used in various ways. And there are literally thousands of brushes you can use to make your photos awesome. While most digital art is abstract, you can still use Photoshop to create more traditional art. When you create a new image, you will be asked to choose a brush. You can select a solid-colored, gradient, or patterned brush from the menu. Photoshop brushes can be really expensive, so you should explore how you can make your own brushes in Photoshop. If you can create a brush that is considered standard, you can use it for a fee. There is no way to use the same brush several times. The Brush Tool can be used to create gradients, or create custom gradient fills for text. To create custom brushes, right-click (Windows) or Ctrl+click (Mac) on the canvas and choose Select > Edit Brush, then navigate to the brushes tab. You can then select a brush to use. To make a new brush, press Ctrl+D (Windows) or the Cmd+D (Mac) key. Alternatively, you can select a color from the color picker, shown below, and then click and drag to create your own. Brushes can be either solid or have preset patterns. For most people, the gradients are the most popular brushes because they are probably already familiar with gradients from other software. Gradients can be created by using the Brush Tool (W) or the Gradient Tool (G). You have these options when you use the Brush Tool (W): Gradient presets: The Gradient Options panel has several gradient presets that you can use: Pencil You have these options when you use the Gradient Tool (G): Pencil Pencil is where you select the colors you want by clicking on the pattern you want to use. Click on the color you want to fill the gradient with. Once you are done selecting colors for your gradient, click OK. You have these options when you use the Gradient Brush (G): Pattern You have these options when you use the Gradient Brush (G): For more information about using the Gradient Tool (G) and the Gradient Brush (G), see the Brush Basics tutorial. The Gradient Brush (G) is useful in a few ways: You can use the Gradient Brush to

Pages Wednesday, 26 July 2013 I kept this birthday a low key one as I was travelling with my daughter, 8, which kept me pretty much away from the kids. I put the kids to bed and caught up on a bit of reading. A very important part of any birthday is having a surprise party for me. I asked my husband what he wanted and he said it would be nice if I was surprised with flowers in the living room. I had no idea that he had put together a wonderful plan. He even had his brother arrive and we all had dinner on the back patio. I still can't stop smiling. I woke up this morning thinking about my aunt when she turned 97 years old last week. I love the strength of will she has displayed. She gave up smoking in the 90's and still walks around the house and climbs stairs by herself. It was such a gift to be able to witness that kind of strength. I can't even imagine what that would be like. What a gift to be able to dance into a younger generation and show them that it is possible to keep the mind sharp and the body active and supple. Wednesday, 19 July 2013 When it rains on Mother's Day I am reminded that I have a gift I need to share. One of the most beautiful things I have ever seen is maggots and flies. I remember one morning when I was a child and I was collecting them to feed to the cats. My parents got a kick out of it. I would count the maggots in my hand and say that I needed just a few more. They were always trying to make me eat them. My mother thought that would be safer. This morning I cleaned the fridge out and found a bunch of already dead maggots that fell out. I decided to call my father who is already with my mother for what I suspect will be the last time they get to visit them. I told him and he reminded me that this is mother's day and I should be saying something nice. I don't know where they got the idea, but I just like to comment on one that has just landed in my hand and then gave me my usual manicured index finger. Thanks for putting up with my stream of consciousness and I hope you have a relaxing Mother
